Off the wall, Faculty!

In response to a challenge by Maj. Hugh Tyndall, Head of WKU's Military Science Department, a handful of brave (?) and daring faculty took part in a rappelling exercise off the University Parking Structure. Left, Patty Randolph, Psychology. See more colleagues, pages 2 and 3.

'Rappelling!'...

On the wall...

Dr. Sally Kuhlenschmidt, a member of the psychology faculty, goes over the wall of the Parking Structure in a rappelling exercise just for faculty and staff, "because I'd never done it," she says.

Photos by Bob Skipper

It happened on a sunny Friday afternoon a couple of weeks ago. "Guess it was the pressure of fall semester starting already," one passer-by said. "Nah, answered a student. One of them's my professor. She's like that. Really off the wall."

And off the wall they were! About a dozen faculty and staff from the College of Education and Behavioral Sciences went over the wall of the Parking Structure, second floor first, then third, then off the top in a rappelling exercise.

Apparently, some faculty will do anything if dared, and the story has it Maj. Hugh Tyndall, Professor of Military Science, issued the challenge to Education and Behavioral Sciences faculty at their opening meeting for the fall semester.

About 100 students this semester are learning the skill Military Science 101, Mountaineering and Marksmanship, a two-hour general education equivalent course. Next semester, those who have had this course can take Mil. Sci. 103, advanced rappelling techniques. (Anybody up for that)?

It seems the participants overall had a great time, taught by Master Sgt. James Bronson. "Exciting? Oh yeah!" exclaimed Kuhlenschmidt after going over a couple of times.

Why would they want to do this? "Because I never had before," Kuhlenschmidt said, adding: "And I like novel experiences."

Sgt. Bronson, exhausted from looking out over his mountaineers, says he remembers mostly hearing "Oh, my gosh!" "Alot," he said, good naturedly.

Maj. Tyndall enjoys issuing the challenge to his colleagues, and once again extends the invitation to faculty and staff across the campus to experience the highs and lows of rappelling, he says.

Who were the daredevils in the first faculty rappelling class? Proud to have their names in public, they were: Patty Randolph, Psychology, B.J. Cummings, Diagnostic Center, Jim Becker, Teacher Education, Joyce Wilder, Psychology, Sally Kuhlenschmidt, Psychology, Sharon Hartz, Dean's Office, her daughter, Andrea Garris, Barb Kacer, Teacher Education, John Kiraly, Teacher Education and Audrey Spies, Public Safety (who "had a leg up," so to speak, since her teammates said she had done it before in officer training).

... Off the wall!

WKU researcher studies children's emotions

Dr. Elizabeth Lemerise, WKU assistant professor of psychology, will use a $30,650 grant to study the effects of emotion on how children process information in social situations.

Dr. Lemerise was awarded the grant by the H.F. Guggenheim Foundation to compare aggressive and nonaggressive children and how emotional arousal affects their ability to handle social situations.

"Previous research has shown that peer rejection and aggression during childhood are strong predictors of both juvenile and adult criminality," Dr. Lemerise said. "These findings have stimulated an explosion of research on peer relations and aggression in children. This work has shown that aggressive children not only behave differently from their peers; they process social information differently as well."

While it is known that aggressive children show a number of distinct social thinking errors and biases, Dr. Lemerise said researchers don't know why. One theory is that aggressive children may enter social situations already in a state of negative emotional arousal, or with a predisposition to become emotionally aroused very easily, she said, and this leads to information processing errors and biases.

"We know that when you are upset is not the best time to make decisions," she said.

Dr. Lemerise plans to test this theory by interviewing hundreds of children between ages 4 and 8, both aggressive and nonaggressive, over the next few years, presenting them with provocation and peer entry situations and comparing their reactions.

The results could lead to a better understanding of the role emotional arousal plays in the way a person thinks through a social situation, she said, and may lead to the development of ways of helping aggressive children deal with social situations.

The grant is for one year and may be extended, Dr. Lemerise said.

Looking for volunteers for testing techniques

Dr. Sally Kuhlenschmidt, associate professor of psychology, is looking for parents and their babies who will volunteer to help students in her classes learn about testing techniques.

Students in Dr. Kuhlenschmidt's masters level classes in psychology are learning to give a standard development battery and need volunteers to take the test.

The babies of the volunteers should be from 2 months to 3 years, 0 months old. In return for participation, results will be explained to the parents or guardians, Dr. Kuhlenschmidt says.

A few children ages 6 to 16 are needed for intellectual or achievement assessment, which may take from 2 to 5 hours, depending on the tests. Testing takes less than an hour for infants. Testing will take place on campus and is designed to be enjoyable for the child. A parent or guardian needs to be present during the assessment.

For more information, you may leave your name and phone number, along with ages of the children at 2695. You will be contacted.

Soon we can say, 'the phone books are here!'

There are always questions every fall about the campus telephone book, so we asked the people who put it together to give us some tips on making changes, etc., because those things aren't always simple. The reason is because anytime information involves us personally, the University must be very careful to respect your right to privacy.

Pamela Napier in the Department of Human Resources, works with data on the phone book and Tom Meacham in University Relations coordinates putting the book together.

It takes time to get everybody, including late registration folks, on the data base, and that's why it seems such a long time for the book to be published.

It should be out soon, however. Meantime, here's what's involved:

The Western Kentucky University Student/Faculty Telephone Directory is created from three separate computer files. Each file is handled by a different campus unit and has a different procedure for making updates.

STUDENTS

The student listings (pages 61-157) are taken from the student database in the Registrar's Office.

To update student information in this database, you should submit the correct information in writing to the Registrar's Office by the fifth class day of the semester. Students who prefer that this information not be published must submit a written request to the Registrar's Office by the fifth class day of the semester. Residence hall addresses and telephone numbers will be automatically updated by the Housing Office. Otherwise, it is your responsibility to be correctly listed or not listed, as outlined in the 1994 WKU Fall Schedule Bulletin.

FACULTY/STAFF

The faculty/staff listings (pages 17-59) are taken from the employee payroll database in the HRS system. Below is a list of what can be changed and where the authority to change it originates.

Your Name. Western must pay you and keep your records in the name by which the Social Security Administration knows you.

Submit a new Social Security card bearing the name you want listed, and your name will be changed in the Telephone Directory, and on your paycheck, retirement information, life insurance policy, and so on.

Your Home Address. Where your residence is listed determines what taxes you pay, and where your retirement, health and life insurance benefits will be sent. You will need to sign three forms: the Warren County Schools tax form, the Retirement System form, and the WKU Change of Address form. If you do not want your address and/or telephone number published, send a memo to Human Services requesting this.

Your Title. Titles are changed by submitting a Form 4, Personnel Action form that has been signed by your department head, your dean, your vice president, and the president. Be aware that there are field-length limitations imposed by the publisher of the Telephone Directory; you may be Coordinator of Publications Services, but the Telephone Directory will be able to accommodate only "Coordinator."

Your Department Name. Departments are created and named by the Board of Regents, and official name changes must be made at this level. However, legitimate misprints and typographical errors will be corrected system-wide once a year. If your salary comes from one department but your office is in another department, or you have a split assignment, contact the Office of Human Services, and special arrangements can be made to accommodate this.

Your Personal Campus Location and Telephone Number. These can be updated throughout the year. Send a memo to the Office of Human Services with your new location and telephone number, and the same information to the Office of Telephone Communications for the use of the Campus Operator.

WKU expands interactive t v classrooms

Western Kentucky University will establish additional interactive television classrooms expanding its existing extended campus network as part of a $3.6 million Kentucky TeleLinking Network grant.

The grant has been awarded to Kentucky by the U.S. Department of Education for the Kentucky TeleLinking Network (KTLN), a full-duplex audio, video and data network. The grant will allow the state to expand the current teleconferencing/telelearning network from 16 to 60 sites throughout the state.

This is the result of extraordinary level of teamwork between state agencies, including the public universities, Council on Higher Education, Kentucky Department of Education, Kentucky Information Resource Management Commission, Finance and Administration Cabinet and Department of Information Systems, said WKU President Thomas C. Meredith.

"The Kentucky TeleLinking Network Grant will significantly expand and enhance Western's existing interactive television network," said Dr. Charles M. Anderson, assistant vice president for Finance and Administration. "The grant will provide the capability to offer more courses and services at extended campus locations and fully participate in network activities throughout the state and nation."

Dr. Anderson said Western will add second classrooms in Glasgow and Owensboro as part of the grant. Western will also add a second classroom on campus for originating the programs. Western currently has one classroom on campus with classrooms in Owensboro, Glasgow and Ft. Knox.

Western has been among the leaders in the development of interactive television instruction in Kentucky, Dr. Anderson said. In 1984, Western was the first institution in Kentucky to offer a class at a distance via interactive television — a graduate communication research methods course in Owensboro.

Enrollment is 14,900

An estimated 14,900 students are attending WKU this fall, according to preliminary enrollment figures.

While the estimate is down from the fall 1993 figure of 15,335, the University has an increased number of beginning freshmen.

Final enrollment figures will be available in November.

OFFICE LISTINGS

Office listings, student organizations, fax numbers and retirees (pages 1-16) are on a PageMaker file in the Office of University Relations. Send a memo to the Office of University Relations with your new location and telephone number.

Much of the information used to update the student database in the Registrar's Office and the employee payroll database in the Office of Human Services is not available until after the beginning of the fall semester. The earlier in the semester the student and employee databases are downloaded, the greater the possibility of error. In seeking to produce an earlier Telephone Directory this year, the Office of University Relations hopes that you will find it accurate and helpful.

The Telephone Directory can list only full-time employees.

Get your feet wet with Aqueous '94

Aqueous '94, the 17th annual national juried watercolor exhibit, will be at The Kentucky Museum, Oct. 9 - Nov. 20, 1994.

The 100-work show, a favorite among art lovers and novices alike, will give visitors an opportunity "to get into the swim of art" and enjoy paintings by some of the country's best watercolorists.

Those who want to do more than "get their feet wet," may jump in with both feet and sign up for "Art in the A.M.," a program designed to give young people and adults an opportunity to learn more about "Aqueous" and watercolor as a medium.

Scheduled for 10:00-11:30 a.m., Saturday, Oct. 22, at The Kentucky Museum, "Art in the A.M." will include watercolor painting workshops for children and a "Walk Through the Gallery" for adults.

The workshops, limited to 25 participants each, will be divided into two groups: grades K-4 and 5-8. Kelly Hammers and Nell Peperis, well known and highly respected art educators in this community, will lead the workshops.

The adult program in the "Aqueous" exhibit will be led by local watercolorist Sandra Schaap.

Pre-registration is necessary. Call Earlene Chelf, (502) 745-5263.

Anything Goes
by
Cole Porter

Oct. 3, 4, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16

Anything Goes is a delightful comedy romp nicely spiced with the best of songs by Cole Porter. I Get A Kick Out of You, Let's Misbehave, Blow, Gabriel, Blow, and the title song highlight the musical score. The story is a love story that takes place on board a cruise ship bound for Europe. Billy stows away on the cruise to be next to his beloved Hope, whose mother wishes her to marry an English nobleman. Reno Sweeny, a noted entertainer and guest on board ship, helps out her old pal, Billy, by 'entertaining' the English nobleman so Billy will have a clear field with Hope. Another celebrity passenger is Moonface Martin, Public Enemy Number 13. In order to remain undiscovered as a stowaway, Billy must use many disguises, that also involve Moonface. The 1991 updated script which will be presented at Western varies from the 1934 original, but the love-conquers-all theme is still in place and the music is simply divine!

Mellon Fellowships

The Mellon Fellowships in Humanistic Studies program welcomes nominations of truly outstanding seniors or recent graduates who wish to begin graduate work in preparation for a career of teaching and scholarship. Students in the traditional humanities disciplines, including history, but not the creative or performing arts, are eligible. Not included are the social sciences or professional fields such as education, law, library science and social work.

High grade point averages and GRE scores are not the sole measure of excellence sought. In addition to intellectual ability, the regional and national selection committees are looking for evidence of personal characteristics likely to contribute to effective teaching, including breadth of interest, liveliness of mind and spirit, and the ability to communicate.

The stipend for Mellon Fellows entering graduate school in the fall of 1995 will be $13,250 plus payment of all tuition and standard fees to their graduate schools. Candidacies must be initiated by a nomination from a faculty member. The deadline for nominations is Nov. 12, 1994. You are invited to direct questions and/or requests for brochures about the program to Western's campus representative, Dick Troutman, Department of History, 3841.
